Welcome to Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences

The Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences (FASS) has a prominent history in the field of education, strives to empower every postgraduate with knowledge, skills and attitudes to reach their full potential shouldering the national responsibility of uplifting the higher education in Malaysia.

The Faculty has a vibrant research culture where our postgraduate students have opportunities to be involved in cutting edge research and work with world experts in their field. The wide-ranging expertise at the Faculty means we can accommodate many research interests and thesis proposals, including innovative interdisciplinary work that links to our strategic research themes.

The coursework programmes with target oriented courses are designed with the new approaches and technologies in the modern day to facilitate the current global and local trends and to cater to the targeted clientele. The teaching learning process is conducted by a highly qualified staff both internal and external. The external staff are drawn from the private and state sector with wide practical experience. Some of the courses are offered through hybrid mode (integrated class room and e learning) to facilitate an effective learning experience. Through our numerous collaborations with other reputed universities and institutes both local and international, joint research degrees are being offered. The close collaboration with the industry representing both government and private sector ensures that our teaching research and national development efforts are more practical and targeted.

The Faculty takes great pride in its capacity as a distinguished and influential institution steeped in tradition and committed to academic excellence. Our commitment to excellence in education, learning, and research is uncompromising. As today, the Faculty continues to reach outwards, welcoming students who have the desire and ability to learn and produce new insights that shift and deepen our understanding of the world around us.

FACULTY MANAGEMENT

The Faculty Management is led by the Dean, supported by Deputy Deans, the Faculty Manager, and Assistant Registrars. This organizational structure provides clear lines of authority and responsibility. It ensures effective governance and smooth administration of the faculty.

POSTGRADUATE GENERAL INFORMATION

The Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences (FASS) offers a wide range of postgraduate programmes designed to meet the academic and professional needs of students from diverse backgrounds. At the Master's level, the faculty provides three main pathways: the Master of Arts (by Research), the Master of Arts (Mixed Mode), and the Master by Coursework. At the doctoral level, the Faculty offers the Doctor of Philosophy (Ph.D.) by Research.

The Faculty encompasses a wide range of academic disciplines, including Anthropology and Sociology, Chinese Studies, East Asian Studies, Southeast Asian Studies, English, History, Indian Studies, International and Strategic Studies, Media and Communication Studies, Geography, Social Administration and Justice, Gender Studies, Library and Information Science, and China Studies. Graduates of these programmes pursue careers in academia, research, policy development, consultancy, media and communication, diplomacy, and leadership roles in both public and private sectors. With diverse academic expertise and strong research culture, the Faculty provides an enriching postgraduate environment that fosters critical thinking, professional advancement, and meaningful contributions to society.

Admission

An applicant who wishes to pursue a degree programme of study shall meet the minimum requirements and qualifications of the Universiti Malaya Postgraduate programme as set out in Schedule 1 of Universiti Malaya Regulations (Master's Degree) 2024 and Universiti Malaya Regulations (Doctoral Degree) 2024.

Deferment

1. The maximum duration of deferment of the initial registration allowed is one (1) semester from the expiry of the original letter of offer. An extension of one (1) semester may be given subject to the condition that the candidate applies and obtains the approval from the Dean of the Faculty.
2. If a candidate does not register within the stipulated period or any approved period of deferment, the offer of admission for the programme of study shall lapse automatically.
3. A candidate who is allowed to defer the initial registration shall not be considered as a registered candidate and is not entitled to use any of the University's facilities.

Duration of Programme of Study

A candidate shall pursue and complete his programme of study within the prescribed duration.

Minimum and Maximum Duration

1. The minimum and maximum duration for the Master's Degree programme of study is as determined in Schedule 1 and Schedule 2 of these Rules.
2. Notwithstanding anything contained in subrule (1) above, in certain circumstances, the Dean of the Faculty or any other officer as may be determined by the University may extend the duration of candidature beyond the maximum duration as prescribed in subrule (1) above provided that such extension shall not exceed three (3) semesters.

Suspension of a Candidate's Programme of Study

The duration of suspension of a candidate's programme of study where punishment has been imposed under the University of Malaya (Discipline of Students) Rules 1999 shall not be taken into account as part of the maximum duration of the programme of study.

Structure of Programme by Research and by Mixed Mode

1. For an academic programme by Research, the candidate shall undertake full time research resulting in the production of a dissertation. Notwithstanding that, a candidate may be required to attend certain courses as may be prescribed by the University or the Faculty concerned.
2. For an academic programme by Mixed Mode, the candidate shall be required to follow the said programme based on the structure of the academic programme and produce a dissertation as may be prescribed in the Regulations made under these Rules.
3. Programme External Assessors for each academic programme offered by the University shall be appointed by the relevant Deputy Vice Chancellor on the recommendation of a Special Committee appointed by the Senate as specified in the Regulations.

Structure of Programme by Coursework

1. For an academic programme by Coursework, the candidate is required to pursue an academic programme fully comprising courses and produce a research report.
2. Programme External Assessor for each academic programme offered by the University shall be appointed by the relevant Deputy Vice Chancellor on the recommendation of a Special Committee appointed by the Senate as specified in the Regulations.

Bahasa Melayu Requirement

1. A candidate who is a Malaysian citizen shall be required, before being conferred the degree, to possess at least a:
 - a. pass the Bahasa Malaysia or Bahasa Melayu at the Sijil Pelajaran Malaysia level;
 - b. Level III in the Sijil Bahasa Malaysia or Bahasa Melayu Universiti or at an equivalent level;
 - c. pass the Bahasa Malaysia or Bahasa Melayu course as recognised by the University; or
 - d. pass the Bahasa Malaysia or Bahasa Melayu exemption assessment as set by the University.
2. A non-citizen candidate is required to attend at a satisfactory level a Bahasa Malaysia or Bahasa Melayu course conducted by the University before being conferred his degree unless he obtains at least a:
 - a. pass the Bahasa Malaysia or Bahasa Melayu at the Sijil Pelajaran Malaysia level;
 - b. Level III in the Sijil Bahasa Malaysia or Bahasa Melayu Universiti or at an equivalent level;
 - c. pass the Bahasa Malaysia or Bahasa Melayu course as recognised by the University; or
 - d. pass the Bahasa Malaysia or Bahasa Melayu exemption assessment as set by the University.
3. Notwithstanding subrules (1) and (2), the Bahasa Malaysia or Bahasa Melayu requirement may be waived for a candidate who has pursued a programme of study and has been conferred a degree from a Local and Private Institute of Higher Learning where the medium of instruction used was the national language.

MA students from the Department of English attending the Lloyd Fernando Seminar Series in April 2025, with Malaysian filmmaker Irwan Junaidy. These seminars, held regularly during the teaching semester and throughout the academic year, provide invaluable opportunities for our students to engage with professionals from both academia and industry in various areas of English literary and cultural studies.

Muhammad Adib Mohd Faiz

Literature, when taught well, is a cultural passport. I entered the program with a handful of writers in my literary suitcase. I emerged with an appreciation of children's books, Asian Shakespeare, and writers from across the globe. But I also went beneath the surface, mining texts for hidden meanings. While my undergraduate degree was a solitary trek fuelled by caffeine, my postgraduate experience was a group expedition with a caravan of coursemates. Who knew that Malaysian literature could move people to tears? Or that modern drama could trigger debates over geopolitics? Such moments are a testament to the program's effectiveness, the commitment of our lecturers, and the power of studying great literature. So sign up. Pack your books. Your literary journey awaits.

Celine Woon

The Master of Arts (English Literature) programme is not just about reading and analysing English language texts but also about developing critical perspectives and expanding one's intellectual horizons. The course modules introduced me to diverse and thought-provoking topics that broadened my understanding of literature. I am especially grateful for the support of my supervisors in encouraging me to pursue an unconventional digital text for my dissertation. This reflects the department's openness to new and innovative approaches in the field. The lecturers here are very supportive and knowledgeable, making the programme an enriching experience for students.

SYNOPSIS OF COURSE CONTENTS

AOA7001 Research Methodology in Literary Studies

This course aims to equip students with a knowledge of the foundational methods as well as the technical skills needed to produce a Master's thesis and other types of research-based academic writing in the humanities and literary studies. It will be run in the form of weekly seminars on topics, which include: choosing and refining a research topic, how to use library research materials (both print and electronic), and how to formulate research methods and documentation for academic writing. Students will demonstrate their knowledge and skills in research techniques and methods by producing a number of written assignments.

AOA7002 Dissertation

Through this course, students develop their critical and research skills in order to produce a dissertation on a specific topic. They go through the process of designing the topic, gathering research materials, carrying out analysis, and writing the thesis, before submitting it for examination.

AOA7007 Modernist Literature

This course will act as a postgraduate introduction to the important twentieth century literary movement of Modernism. Various poems, extracts and passages will be used to analyse the various features, styles, techniques, and modes of its writing. And by the end of the course the student will be prepared to write in depth on one or more of the Modernist texts.

AOA7009 Drama of the Modern Era

This course will cover the development of modern drama, from its beginnings in the 19th century to the current globalised, contemporary world. Through analysis of plays by a variety of major modern dramatists from the 19th, 20th and 21st centuries, students will become aware of the importance of drama as a tool to study and understand this rapidly developing and changing world.

AOA7014 From Book to Screen

Students will be exposed to some of the most current theories of adaptation and will be shown how to employ specific tools in order to analyse films inspired by literature. Material will be drawn from the Western literary canon as well as hybrid literature which situates itself in relation to the East/West binary.

AOA7017 African Literature

The course is a detailed study of the major writers and diverse literary traditions of the continent. It covers select texts from different genres and regions. Students will study the historical and cultural contexts of the writing, publication, and reception of African literature. They will pay particular attention to the different forms and techniques with which the writers convey their ideas, and explore in detail some of the most interesting of those composite ideas and themes.

AOA7018 Creative Writing

This course will act as an introduction to the art of creative writing. Students will participate in all the brainstorming sessions, workshops as well as class presentations throughout the semester, while being introduced by the instructor to the various forms/genres of literary writing such as haiku, the short story, life writing, flash fiction and so forth.

AOA7019 Global Shakespeares

Students will be exposed to adaptations and appropriations of Shakespeare from various countries. These will be studied in relation to screen and theatrical traditions, as well as social, cultural, and political contexts. Students will also compare contemporary and early modern performances of Shakespeare.

AOA7021 Nineteenth-century British Literature

A variety of literary texts representative of the British Romantic and Victorian eras will be studied in terms of social background, history and philosophy. Students will be exposed to major texts from 19th-century British Literature from a variety of genres such as poetry, essays, novels, political articles and drama. The course will take the form of seminars and class discussions and will focus on literary developments and innovations in the literature of the era, as well as consider numerous influential issues and concepts such as empire, race, commerce, power, gender and sexuality.

AOA7022 Twentieth Century American Literature

Through an exploration of short stories, novels and poetry, the purpose of this course is to enable students to better appreciate the breadth and sophistication of 20th century American literature. The course may include discussion in particular of the most striking literary developments in this period, including imagism, modernism, counter-culture, postmodernism, and inter-ethnic identity—for example African-American and/or Asian-American. Each segment of the course will involve close reading of the assigned texts and exposure to the socio-historical and cultural background.

AOA7023 Literature for Children and Young Adults

This course will examine numerous key texts in children's and young adult literature from a wide range of genres such as picture books, folk and fairy tales, poetry, fables, animal tales, fantasy, adventure and domestic fiction, as well as classic and contemporary novels, and from a variety of historical and cultural contexts. The course will analyse the changing attitudes towards ideas of childhood and adolescence, and engage with the critical and theoretical discourses linked to children's and young adult literature from the nineteenth-century to the present. Materials will range from classics of the Golden Age of children's literature to contemporary, multicultural representations of childhood and young adulthood. Modules will include discussions on the status and development of youth literature in Malaysia.

AOA7024 Global Women's Literature

The course is a detailed study of women writers from all around the globe. It covers select texts from different genres and regions. Students will study the historical and cultural contexts of the various writings, publications and reception of women's literature across cultures, time and space. They will pay particular attention to the different forms and techniques with which the writers convey their ideas and explore in detail readings organised around themes such as beginnings, girlhood, community identity, class, land, motherhood and bodies.

AOA7025 Literary Theory

This course introduces the student to the main theories that have been influential in literary criticism. The students will write essays and make in-class presentations or lead and participate in discussion as exercises in the application of the theories to literary texts. This will help students to read more critically the texts that are taught in other courses as well. In addition, the students will be given the opportunity to interrogate literary theory itself and critique the assigned theories and examine the relationships between them.

AOA7026 Critical Strategies in Literary Analysis

The aim of this course is to introduce the basic elements of structure and language students will encounter in English literary texts. Students will learn to apply this knowledge in their reading and interpretation of extracts from different texts of English literature.

AOA7027 Perspectives on Malaysian and Singaporean Literature

In this course, students are introduced to literary trends in writings in English from Malaysia and Singapore. Students will analyse texts from the colonial era as well as writings by important authors writing in English from Malaysia and Singapore.

AOA7028 Contemporary South Asia

This module will introduce a selection of texts across genres from South Asia along with a complementary set of critical readings that students will apply to the reading of primary texts. The texts will be approached in the context of neo/colonial politics, the conflicts between history and modernity, issues of gendered and racialized identities as well as globalisation. Students would gain a fairly in-depth knowledge of leading literary works from South Asia.

Master of Arts (Malaysian History)

The Master of Arts (Malaysian History) offers a comprehensive and critical study of Malaysia's historical evolution from the pre-modern period to the present. Emphasising historiography, methodology, and the use of primary sources, the programme equips students with advanced analytical and research skills essential for postgraduate scholarship.

The curriculum engages with Malaysia's political, social, and economic transformations, situating local developments within wider Southeast Asian and global contexts. Particular attention is given to colonial encounters, nation-building, and the dynamics of multicultural society.

This programme is designed for graduates seeking to deepen their expertise in Malaysian history, whether for academic research, teaching, or professional fields where historical perspectives are valued. Students will also undertake a dissertation, contributing original research to the study of Malaysia's past.

Yang Dachang

During my time at UM, I gained a lot. The lecturers and classmates provided me with a lot of help, for which I am very grateful. The courses broadened my horizons and taught me to view history and the world from a completely new perspective. I really enjoyed life in Kuala Lumpur—it's vibrant and welcoming, bringing together people and diverse cultures from different countries. In Kuala Lumpur, I encountered people from all over the world. The food here is also delicious, haha.

Li Qing

The Malaysian History Programme exposed me to a completely new history and culture. In the History Department of UM, I met many thoughtful and idealistic historians and scholars. As an international student, I saw new ideas and new perspectives in historical research and felt the enthusiasm from Malaysia. I am very happy to pursue my master's degree here.

Master of Arts (Publishing Studies)

The Master of Arts (Publishing Studies) programme takes a proactive look at the world of publication, while deeply dissecting the meaning and reasons of writings both locally and internationally.

Publishing requires the knowledge of many disciplines – from recognising and appreciating truly great works, to understanding and applying new technologies to the publication industry. Whether a literary novel or a scientific paper, each publication has the potential to change how we think. Words can open the eyes of the world.

Arinah Husna

I gained a lot of knowledge and experience throughout these two years in the Media Department. I enjoyed attending physical classes as I got to engage with the lecturers and also my classmates. I was encouraged to speak up and share my opinions in class, which helped improve my confidence and communication skills. It was always a nourishing experience to exchange ideas during class because I learned a lot more than what was explained, as well as gaining new insight from a different perspective by listening to my friends and the lecturer's feedback. I will never forget my postgraduate experience at UM. Even though there were challenges, I am thankful for every obstacle as they shaped me into a more mature person than I was before I started my studying journey here.

SYNOPSIS OF COURSE CONTENTS

AOD7001

Research Methodology in Area Studies

This is a compulsory course for every student of this academic programme. It is an important preparation before students write their dissertations. In the beginning of this course, students learn about social science research methods related to area studies in the context of Sustainable Development Goals. In the latter part, students will learn to interpret data in scientific ways. Besides that, students will be trained to process and analyse data using computer software. In the final part of the course, students will learn to design research proposals that can be carried out effectively. Things that are taught include academic writing, bibliography writing and data presentation.

AOD7002

Dissertation

This course teaches students to conduct research and write academically. Students are required to prepare a research proposal with the appropriate research questions and research design. This will be followed with a systematic review of relevant literature. Once the research proposal is approved by the department, students can proceed with data collection complying with appropriate research ethics. Data collected will be analysed using relevant research methods and tools. The outcome of the research will be written as a dissertation and submitted for examination.

AOD7003

Comparative Development in Southeast Asia

The course introduces some of the major development theories in the literature on development in the post 1950s era. These theories would be discussed in relation to development in the developing world including the Southeast Asian region. In the first part of the course, classical, neoliberal and Marxist theories will be examined vis-à-vis the Southeast Asian context. The second part discusses the various stages in development theory from the post WW 2 to the emergence of national development plans and strategies. The final part examines some of the main issues in development studies such as dependency, underdevelopment, poverty, migration and super diversity, human rights and developmental challenges in the context of achieving Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) for the region.

AOD7006

International Political Economy

This course discusses the interaction between politics and economy, nation states and markets at the international level. Amongst the issues that will be discussed are concepts and theories that are related to international political economy. The relationship between political and economic actors at the international level will be explained. This will be followed with a discussion on financial and trade institutions at the international level such as IMF, World Bank and MNCs as well as financial institutions at the regional level namely in the Southeast Asia region. Lastly, the course will also discuss the integration process of the Southeast Asian region in facing challenges and demands brought by the global economy including to achieve the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) 2030.

AOD7008

Maritime Trade in Southeast Asia

This course discusses the development of maritime trade in Southeast Asia. The first part of the course explains the background of maritime trade, port and shipping in Southeast Asia. The second part of the course analyses the role of government and private sectors in the expansion of maritime trade in Southeast Asia to meet the demand in international trade. These include port infrastructure development and digital technology in facilitating trade and shipping in the region. The third and final part of the course relates the policies formulated by the governments of Southeast Asia with the global sustainable development goals towards sustainable economic growth.

AOD7010

Labour and Employment in Southeast Asia

The economic transformation of Southeast Asia in recent decades has created mutual dependence on one another in terms of labour and employment needs. This course will comprehensively discuss aspects of labour and employment in Southeast Asia. Topics discussed are divided into two parts. This program has broadened my understanding of Comprehensive Security, extending beyond the military dimension to political, economic, and cultural aspects, with a special focus on Southeast Asia's regional security. Equally important was engaging with peers from Islamic cultural backgrounds, which provided new insights and challenged my assumptions. These experiences enriched both my academic perspective and my practical capacity to work across diverse cultural contexts.

Justin Zhao Jianan

This year at MMS has been incredibly meaningful for me. First, I've gained solid professional knowledge. MMS offers a comprehensive range of courses, from theory to practice, that align with my personal development goals. Second, the MMS has provided tremendous support and guidance. We've formed close friendships with our classmates, and the faculty are incredibly kind, allowing me to feel a sense of warmth and support even in a foreign country. I'm grateful for everything MMS has provided, and I hope it continues to improve!

AQA7003

Advance Media and Communication Theories

The course introduces students to the three major theoretical perspectives in media and communication studies, namely the Positivist Perspective, the Interpretive Perspective, and the Critical/Cultural Perspective. The course then discusses several media and communications theories from each perspective. To clarify the association between theory and real world phenomena, students will be guided through the analyses of journal articles related to the theories and perspectives studied.

AQA7004

In the process of producing such products, collaboration with appropriate parties, including profit-oriented organizations, non-profit-oriented organizations, or/and voluntary communities will be strongly encouraged.

Yang Hanwen

In MMS courses, I believe theory and practice coexist. We have ample practical components, such as our entire graduation project, our creative projects, and case collection and analysis in certain modules. These all require us to venture beyond the campus environment, engaging directly with businesses and organisations, while simultaneously applying the theoretical concepts taught on campus to conduct analysis.

Simultaneously, every lecturer within the MMS programme has provided invaluable support. Regardless of the query, each interaction with my tutors has yielded substantial assistance. My deepest gratitude extends to every lecturer who has guided me throughout the MMS curriculum!

Lu Shixin

The year I spent studying and living in the Chinese Department was a great blessing for my personal growth and academic progress. I signed up for as many courses as required in the fields of literature and Chinese culture. These courses greatly enhanced my academic skills and shaped my literary foundation, which is very difficult to achieve through personal efforts alone in a short period of time. However, through the guidance of all the teachers in class and frequent communication, I made remarkable progress in just one year. Literature and culture are among the gems of Chinese Studies in this tropical land. I feel honored and happy to be able to study here. I feel truly honored and happy to study here.

SYNOPSIS OF COURSE CONTENTS

AQC7001

Research Methods in Library and Information Science

The course covers the following topics: formulation of research problems and research questions for quantitative and qualitative research; developing quantitative and qualitative literature reviews; survey designs, ethnographic designs, quantitative and qualitative case study designs; appraising quantitative and qualitative research reports; developing quantitative and qualitative research proposals.

AQC7018

Library and Information Science Research Project

The project provides students the opportunity to perform a deliberate, solution-oriented investigation of an issue in a library and/or information service setting and design a project (solution) to address the issue. The project covers: identification of an information service issue for a specific community; designing an information service project for the selected community; conducting an information service project; assessing the information service project outcomes; and reporting the information service project outcomes for the selected community.

AQC7003

Organization of Information

The course covers the following topics: Bibliographic control, bibliographic tools and transcribing printed information sources according to ISBDG. Transcribing monographs using Anglo-American cataloguing rules. Tagging transcriptions in accordance to MARC. Provide and control the main entry headings for personal and corporate authors. Transcribe conference proceedings. Transcribe analytical works and uniform titles. Transcribe serials and non-book materials. Determine access and quality control of subjects for transcribed entries. Determine the classification number for transcribed entries. Resource Description and Access (RDA) as a new unified cataloguing standard with the online RDA Toolkit subscription as the most effective way to interact with the new standard.

AQC7004

Reference and Information Literacy Services

The course covers the following topics: Introduction to information sources and services; the role of reference and information literacy service in the information environment; an analysis of user information needs and requirements; formulating research strategies, developing search skills, and evaluating information sources. It also provides students with the skills for conducting a reference interview and knowledge about ethics and legal liabilities of information provision.

AQC7005

Technologies for Information Management

The course covers the following topics: Information management; information processes and the technologies used in managing information processes, software applications commonly used in libraries and software evaluation, tools and techniques for planning, implementing and managing technological change for libraries and information services, relational databases for information management, text retrieval systems for information management, library standards: MARC, NISO Z39.50, automating library functions through integrated library system, introduction to digital library, applications of web 2.0 technologies, cloud computing and mobile technologies in libraries

AQC7006

Digital Libraries

Topics included are: Digital library concepts, digital libraries and the global information society, development of digital collections and digital libraries, digital library initiatives and research projects, technical infrastructure of the digital library, knowledge organization in digital libraries, document formats and collection development, information access and users of digital libraries, social, economic and policy issues in developing digital libraries, professional issues in managing digital libraries.

AQC7007

Libraries, Information and Society

This is an introductory course emphasizing the philosophy, history, and social aspects of libraries and librarianship in today's society. This course explores major issues in the library and information science professions as they involve their communities of users and stakeholders. It analyzes specific situations that reflect the professional agenda of these fields, including the various information processes and services, intellectual freedom, community service, professional ethics, social responsibilities, intellectual property, literacy, historical and international models, the socio-cultural role of libraries and information agencies and professionalism in general, focusing in particular on the interrelationships among these issues..

AQC7008

Development of Information Collection

Encompasses the following topics: Introduction to the course: What is collection development? The mission of libraries in general and of particular libraries, Library users, Assessing user and community needs: Collection development policies: Who should select library materials? ; Resource selection tools; Reviews and reviewing: Publishers and Publishing; Selecting electronic resources; Selecting serials; selecting government documents, microforms; Acquisition process, gifts and exchange; Vendor services, outsourcing; Financial management and budgeting; Evaluating collections, citation studies; Weeding, Storage, preservation and conservation; Cooperative collection development; Intellectual freedom, access to information, copyright, licensing.

AQC7009

Management of Library and Information Services

The course covers the following topics: An introduction to management theories and models, library planning, organizational structure in libraries, staffing, motivation, organizational culture, leadership, marketing and budgetary techniques

AQC7010

Indexing, Abstracting and Thesaurus Development

The course covers the following topics: Core concepts in indexing, abstracting, information organization, and explores theories and methods for applying these skills. It provides the student with the necessary knowledge and skills to create and evaluate indexes and abstracts. It also integrates the study of indexing and abstracting into the larger field of library and information science such as information retrieval, databases, semantic relationship and metadata. Students will be exposed to techniques of thesaurus construction.

AQC7011

Web Publishing

This course will enable students to learn the basic characteristics and concepts of web development technology. Student will be able to design the web. They will also develop a web to resolve a business problem.

AQC7012

User Needs and Behavior

The course covers the following topics: Understand information concepts and user behaviour, information needs, seeking and related concepts; models and theories in studies on information behaviour dan users (Wilson, Johnson, Leckie, Kulthau, Bates, etc); methods in user behaviour studies; and information seeking in an electronic environment (Belkin, Marchionini, etc).

AQC7013

Measurement and Evaluation of Library & Information Services

The course covers the following topics: Evaluation of traditional and electronic resources; evaluation of technical and reference services; evaluation of information literacy and bibliographic services; performance measurement in libraries; evaluation of online and information retrieval systems

AQC7014

Special Topics in Library & Information Science (Open Science Principles, Practices & Leadership)

The course provides an opportunity for in-depth study of LIS-related topics pertinent to library services and information technology in public, school, academic or special libraries. It may consist of lectures, seminars, readings, assignments, presentation and project determines by the lecturer. Suggested LIS-related special topics are archive/ records management, information commons, resources and services for specific patron groups; children's and young adults' literature; law librarianship; special librarianship; accreditation and roles of libraries; learning organizations; knowledge management; systems analysis and design for information professional; information retrieval; social media; open access repositories; and data mining.

AQC7015

Digital Humanities

The course covers the following topics: Concepts, theories, and applications in digital humanities; culture of digital humanities and the global information society; up-to-date application and technology used in the development of digital humanities project and research; research initiatives and impact of digital humanities in various disciplines; project development plan for digital humanities including planning, development and evaluation phases; social issues; economic and policy issues in digital humanities projects.

AQC7016

Bibliometrics and Scientific Publishing

The course covers the following topics: A survey of scholarly communication past and present with a particular emphasis on the changes in scholarly communication in the past ten years. Students will examine the interaction between society, technology and scholarly communication the theory and practice of the communication of knowledge in academic and research environments, and how trends developments of publishing and communication are affecting changes in scholarly communications. The course is concerned with the development, improvement and interpretation of bibliometric indicators in particular citation-based indicators for assessing research performance. Students will investigate and compare different data sources available for bibliometric analysis, such as Web of Science, Scopus, Google Scholar and PubMed, and identify the major legal issues in terms of scholarly communication – including intellectual freedom, ethics and the role of professional organizations.

AQC7017

Statistics for Library & Information Science Research

The course covers the following topics: Levels of measurement; descriptive statistics; parametric inferential tests and non-parametric inferential tests; writing up results of hypotheses testing; learning how to input data as well as to analyze data using SPSS For Windows.

Master of Gender Studies

The Gender Studies Programme (GSP) offers courses that unpack inequalities and power relations that must be discussed and addressed for a just and equal society. The GSP was officially launched during the 1994/1995 academic session, under the Dean's Office of the Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences. It is inter and trans disciplinary in approach and offers a range of courses from theory to methodology dealing with the family, economics, politics, peace and conflict, law, and religion. Gender Studies as a teaching discipline is novel in Malaysia because it requires academics and students to deconstruct discriminatory values and practices. The program nurtures students to be sensitive toward gender issues to generate new insights into all aspects of social, economic, and political life. With this exposure, students are able to apply the gender perspective in understanding gender-related issues. The GSP aims to train gender-sensitive students who can apply their training when they enter the job market and are expected to have more critically informed perspectives on gender relations and gender roles in society.

Zhang Shun

When I look back at my GSP journey, I realize that what impacted me the most was the nurturing environment I was immersed in. Throughout the process, I experienced language barriers and inner resistance that made it hard to express myself freely and publicly, especially as someone who tends to be an interaction-addict.

But toward the end, I began to feel more at ease and fulfilled. This evolution was attributed to three aspects: the sense of acceptance I felt in the environment, the communication state I hoped to achieve, and also the passing of time. Actually, I'm deeply curious about how people overcome different forms of resistance in their lives, so if I have the opportunity later on, I would love to interview my teachers and classmates about this.

When I started my life here, I simply wanted to be more natural from then on. And in the final class, the professor pointed out that I was delightfully spontaneous. What a beautiful and touching coincidence!

SYNOPSIS OF COURSE CONTENTS

AQD7001

Methodology and Gender Studies

This course will focus on several aspects of the theory and methodology of gender studies, for example, through an understanding of feminist theories and its significance, as well as its epistemology, ontology, ethics, language, reflexivity, intersectionality and others. Students will also be exposed to different research methods in quantitative and qualitative research that will impact their own research and writing. Technical aspects of writing will also be discussed.

AQD7002 / AQD7016

Research Project

This course provides students intensive training in conducting research, cultivates scholarly academic writing skills and produces a mini gender studies dissertation. Students will have the opportunity to choose a research topic with emphasis on research objectives, research questions, literature review, methodology, theoretical framework and the significance of the research. Before beginning data collection, the students have to produce a research proposal. At the end of the course, students are required to produce a 30,000 words project paper.

AQD7003

Feminist and Gender Theories

The course engages with both feminist and gender theories. It addresses the ways in which feminist theories intersect with other interdisciplinary areas of thought, including Marxist and postcolonial theories, race theory, poststructuralist theory, and theories of transnationalism and globalization. It also examines the interplay of masculinity and feminist theory. Specifically, the notion of gender and gender relations are understood as being constructed in a particular socio-cultural, historical, political and economic milieu. There is a focus on the changing gender relations not only in the local but also the transnational context that problematizes the term global South. Both feminist and gender theories are engaged to understand and challenge social inequalities, and uphold rights. The course aims to think through the ways in which these inequalities intersect with race, class, the nation and colonialism that includes that of culture and the mind. We will discuss why we study "theory" and explore, for example, the relation between feminist theory and political practice.

AQD7004

Gender Studies Postgraduate Seminar

This course provides support for students to refine skills in critical thinking and critical reading towards understanding gender studies research and application. Students will hone their ability to interpret and synthesize ideas by participating in the gender studies seminar and writing commentaries based on the presentations and assigned readings. In addition, as part of the coursework, students will work in teams to organise a gender seminar or equivalent event based on a topic of their choice. Students will also prepare and present their own seminar presentation at the end of the semester.

AQD7005

Gender and Sustainable Development

This course provides students intensive training in conducting research, cultivates scholarly academic writing skills and produces a mini gender studies dissertation. Students will have the opportunity to choose a research topic with emphasis on research objectives, research questions, literature review, methodology, theoretical framework and the significance of the research. Before beginning data collection, the students have to produce a research proposal. At the end of the course, students are required to produce a 30,000 words project paper.

AQD7006

Gender Issues in Contemporary Society

As an introduction to the course, students will be exposed to the latest theories and issues in contemporary societies, especially the impact of Covid-19 pandemic on women, children and vulnerable groups. This course addresses the lived realities of contemporary society facing challenging issues i.e. gender stereotyping, gender inequality, power and masculinity, women's reproductive health, mental illness, vaccine issues, and sexual violence that is spiking during the pandemic. Students are also given the opportunity to demonstrate their understanding about gender issues by using relevant theories.

AQD7007

Sexual Violence and Body Politics

The course engages students with the notion of the body to analyze sexual violence drawing on the intersectionality of, for example, gender, ethnicity, age, class and nationalities. Sexual violence is examined in both the context of peace including during pandemic and as a weapon of war during conflict. The prevalence and dynamics of gender-based violence and its representation in popular culture are discussed. Feminist theorizing on sexual violence, preventive approaches and an embodied policy analysis are explored. Students are exposed to gender-sensitised policy formulation towards ending sexual violence. There is also a segment on how regimes of knowledge and representation can be challenged and yet reproduced at the same time in digital media. Although the focus is on sexual violence, physical violence is also covered.

AQD7008

Gender, Sexualities and Freedom of Expression

This course introduces students to inter-disciplinary frameworks that aim to increase the understanding and awareness of how gender intersects with sexuality within any given society as well as at the global level. The conceptual and theoretical thoughts introduced within this course provide discussions of various perspectives on gender and sexuality that are offered in sexology, psychoanalysis, feminism as well as queer theory. Students will be able to link these discussions to historical developments and current issues in the media and digital spheres, as well as offer comprehensive insights into the complexities in the analysis of gender and sexuality.

AQD7009

Gender, Migration and Diaspora

This course connects contemporary trends in global migrations with a historical understanding of how and why migrants move, as well as how modern nation-states apply the logic of inclusion and exclusion on the basis of who has the potential to 'belong' as a participating citizen. The course is organized into key topics that attempt to unpack constructions of nations, borders, categories of legal and illegal migrants, the migrant body, all within the context of interrogating gender across and within borders. The course will also discuss a range of issues on gender, migrations and diasporas and will address the social and political dimensions of migration and diasporas as well as politics related to constructions of non/belonging. The goal of the course is to expose how today's discourse of illegality and borders borrows from a longer history of state-sovereignty premised upon constructing – and excluding – the 'other'.

AQD7010

Women's Movement in Southeast Asia

This course provides an introduction women's and feminist movements in Southeast Asia, taking a historical lens as well as exploring contemporary issues. This course examines country-specific case studies and will also explore linkages and cross-cutting themes. Students will be introduced to key social actors and movements, and analyse the different issues and strategies in women's rights advocacy in the region.

AQD7011

Engendering Politics and Women's Engagement

This course will focus on several concepts and gender approaches in analysing politics. In this context, it will encourage students to rethink and challenge the mainstream or traditional analysis in understanding political processes. Students will evaluate the political history and the gender-related influences on political behaviour and participation in politics. In addition, students are also exposed to diverse political strategies in achieving gender equality.

AQD7012

Mainstreaming Gender in Development Programmes and Public Policy

Gender mainstreaming is not a policy goal in itself, but a means to achieve gender equality. Equality between women and men is recognised as a fundamental right and a necessary condition for the achievement of the country's objectives of economic growth, employment and social cohesion. Gender mainstreaming was established as a major global strategy for the promotion of gender equality in the Beijing Platform for Action from the Fourth United Nations World Conference on Women in Beijing in 1995. This course demonstrates that gender mainstreaming ensures that development and policymaking has a greater relevance for society, because it makes policies respond more effectively to the needs of all citizens – women and men, girls and boys. It also introduces to students that gender mainstreaming makes public interventions more effective and ensures that inequalities are not perpetuated. Students will be required to analyse the existing situation, with the purpose of identifying inequalities, and developing policies and development programs which aim to redress these inequalities and undo the mechanisms that caused them.

AQD7013

Gender and Intercultural Dialog

The course engages with intercultural dialogue to build better understanding of various cultures, including the faiths embraced, and simultaneously challenges stereotypes of other race, gender and nationalities. In addition to cognitive learning, the course aims to provide opportunities for affective learning through story-telling, discussion of films and engagement at the community level. With the aim of fostering the seeds of peacebuilding in communities that uphold the principle of gender equality, the course will analyze the processes implicated at both the individual and structural levels in particular socio-historical contexts. Students are also inculcated to apply the values, principles and practices to foster intercultural understanding that is also gender equal.

AQD7014

Gender, Traditional Local Knowledge and Community Engagement

The process of knowledge sharing between men and women is not equal in certain indigenous communities. The predominant ideology regarding which gender is more authoritative in the social process of decision-making perpetuates men's domination. It also enables women's knowledge to be extracted through the process of 'sharing' that further legitimates and strengthens men's dominance. In today's rapidly changing way of life, local knowledge has become a scarce commodity amongst the indigenous communities but is still highly significant in various situations including risk management, renewal of natural resources and rebuilding livelihoods. To understand the processes of knowledge structure that reflect gender power relations in indigenous communities, different institutions such as households, communities, NGOs and local governments that are related to different contexts of knowledge will be scrutinised.

AQD7015

Gender, the Economy and Work

Gender operates at all levels of social life and is deeply embedded in how work is organized, rewarded, and experienced. The course aims to be fairly broad-based in its coverage of gender and work. This course discusses contemporary theory and research on gender, economy and work. Furthermore, the course considers recent developments in employment regarding increasing flexibility, informal sector work, migration, unpaid work, domestic and care work, work in the digital economy and the impact of artificial intelligence on work. We will pay particular attention toward understanding how gender shapes and is shaped by the changing nature of modern industrial and digital economies.
